

Tracy Stone-Manning
Director
Bureau of Land Management

Dear Director Stone-Manning:

Oregon Natural Desert Association and our community of sage-grouse advocates are grateful that the Bureau of Land Management (Bureau) has initiated a new process to update and strengthen sage-grouse conservation measures on public lands. Sage-grouse populations continue to trend downward in Oregon and across the West and current management strategies are not sufficient to address mounting threats to the species. In Oregon, the Bureau's new process could improve conservation of sage-grouse and hundreds of other species on more than 10 million acres of public lands. As you develop management alternatives, please consider the following:

1. Build upon the current sage-grouse plan. The current federal plan in Oregon is an important framework for conserving grouse in our state with management prescriptions that should be retained in an updated plan.
2. Strengthen conservation measures in the plan. The Bureau needs to adopt new and stronger science-based conservation measures for the federal strategy to protect sage-grouse against emerging and expanding threats to the species.
3. Account for climate change in the plan. The current plan is missing measures to address the impacts of climate change on sage-grouse, a threat that now ranks among the most important for the species.
4. Designate sagebrush reserves in the plan. Specially designating key sage-grouse habitats on public lands as reserves can help ensure appropriate management for sage-grouse and hundreds of other species that depend on this ecosystem.

Thank you for your attention and commitment to conserving sage-grouse and other fish, wildlife and plants that make Oregon's high desert their home.
